Subject: ROHR TREND ALERT!!

Dear Alert Service Subscriber,
This is a critical short-term view:

On recent form the MARCH S&P 500 FUTURE stalling again into 2,075-80 resistance as recently as last week Tuesday was a negative sign. Slipping back below 2,062-58 left it back into 2,040-35 at the end of last week/year.

Monday's gap lower also left the MARCH S&P 500 FUTURE below the far more major 2,020-10 range. However, as noted on Monday there is a broad berth for 'front month' Tolerance below that into 1,990 (which the December contract came near shortly before expiration.) And the far more critical lower support is the late 2014 into early February 2015 1,975-70 congestion. Each of the previous slides below that area (August and September) saw a slide well below the 1,900 area.

As it has held the slippage below 1,990 on Monday without even reaching 1,975-70, the natural relief rally has seen it back up to the bottom of the 2,020-10 range. While this looks good in the near term, we would tend to be patient in front of the further Services PMI releases and especially the FOMC meeting minutes release on Wednesday.

Only above 2,010-20 does the market look really firm again, even if the supports back into the lower levels are going to be worth watching on any retest.
