Subject: ROHR EARLY TREND ALERT!!

Dear Alert Service Subscriber,

This is an early critical short-term view in light of how the market is trading:

We pretty much saw what we expected last week after the MARCH S&P 500 FUTURE fell below both the major 2,020-10 range and especially its critical lower support into the late 2014 into early February 2015 1,975-70 congestion.

As noted previous, each of the previous slides below that area (during August and September) overran interim supports in the 1,960 and 1,930 areas to at least test the 1,900 area and sometimes fall well below it.

As we noted early Thursday morning, the hefty gap lower opening meant that any MARCH S&P 500 FUTURE rally back to (or even near) the 1,975-70 area is likely to be met with selling, especially if it failed to fully close off the gap above the market back to Wednesday's 1,971.30 low. Which it did, and then failed badly again.

Here's the critical consideration this morning: Failed support in the 1,930 area is now the first resistance this week, and if it is exceeded the 1,960 area at which MARCH S&P 500 FUTURE failed in spite of the US Employment report pre-opening surge is the next resistance area. If it should weaken again instead, the 1,900 area remains the next key support that was not quite reached on the late session selloff extension we expected on Friday.

While there is some interim support below that in the 1,885 area, the truly significant major trend support is not until 1,865-60. More on the importance of that can be seen in our atypical weekend Global View TrendView video update at www.Rohr-Blog.com. That is available to all Gold and Platinum level subscribers.

It includes a view of the long-term trend on the monthly chart showing the confluence of indicators and projections converging in the 1,865-60 area. Please note the Video Timeline for the specific timing of that analysis and other aspects.
