Subject: ROHR TREND ALERT!!

Dear Alert Service Subscriber,
This is a critical short-term view:

Weak global Advance Purchasing Managers Indices this morning along with other soft data has still left the EQUITIES higher. This is the sort of thing that might ultimately hurt the equities, yet has continued to encourage a 'bad news is good news' psychology for now. For anyone who is interested in a more extensive review of all of the potentially negative factors, see Friday's Commentary: Abysmal News is Good News at www.rohr-blog.com.

For now the bears must be content to allow that they are likely to get better levels at which to ultimately sell the EQUITIES if the bad news remains pervasive enough. There was also extensive discussion of the economic headwinds in last Thursday's ALERT!! If you are interested in that analysis please refer back to that.

Here's the critical consideration today: The key this morning is that the current EQUITIES strength has put the MARCH S&P 500 FUTURE up into a critical condition for the near term trend. In the wake of the 1,922 DOWN Break below the short-term aggressive up channel on Thursday, the higher 1,925-32 resistance is more heavily fraught with trend implications.

The violation of the 1,922 DOWN Break by a gap higher opening above the next higher resistance (which was not even fully tested last week) would turn the whole area into even more resilient support than would have previously been the case. The next higher resistances are at least as high as interim levels at 1,950 and 1,958-62, or even the more substantial 1,970-75.
