Subject: ROHR TREND ALERT!!

Dear Alert Service Subscriber,
This is a critical short-term view:

It's been quite an interesting week. That is especially on the degree to which the US EQUITIES have managed to strengthen to new highs for the rally in spite of the less impressive rebound in the energy markets. Might this be pointing to the long awaited divergence between weaker energy prices weighing on the EQUITIES that is not reasonable at some point? That is due to the degree to which lower energy costs are actually a benefit and not a drag on the developed world's economies. We shall see.

What does remain the same is the overall soft economic data in spite of Thursday morning's strong US Durable Goods Orders. However, that can be viewed as an averaging out from last month's extremely weak data in that particularly volatile economic indication. And this morning's above-estimate US Q4 GDP revision is still indeed only up to 1.00%. Not exactly 'strong' overall in the context of what the Fed would like to see to justify further rate hikes. And that is why the EQUITIES have indeed managed to rally further in what remains an 'abysmal news is good news' overall global context.

Here's the critical consideration today: Thursday's EQUITIES strength put the MARCH S&P 500 FUTURE back out above the 1,925-32 resistance, which also was still represents a Negation of the 1,922 DOWN Break from last week Thursday. That put the burden of proof was back on the bears to demonstrate the market could fail back below 1,922 to reinvigorate the bearish tendencies. And that most definitely did not occur, as Thursday morning's early low was 1,922.50.

As noted on previous occasions, higher resistances are into the interim 1,950 area, so it's no surprise it was able to reach that once the trend reverted back to stronger activity after the Tuesday-Wednesday 'hiccup'. That is now also the next lower support. The next interim resistance is the 1,958-62 area it has already tested this morning, with the more prominent 1,970-75 area above that.
