Subject:	ROHR TREND ALERT!!

Dear Alert Service Subscriber,
This is a critical short-term view:

For anyone who missed it, please see Monday's comments on why analysts need to speak out of both sides of their mouths now… with purpose. The reason is the transitional phase in the equities that has some positive near term aspects within what are likely more bearish intermediate term tendencies.

There is also an extensive review of that in Monday's www.rohr-blog.com Analyst Doublespeak post. (That is mostly open source, so you only need a FREE Silver echelon subscription to read the bulk of it.)

And you can see a concise overview of the negative factors that were explored at length in last weekend's Equities Goldilocks Psychology post in our letter that the Letters Editor at the Financial Times was kind enough to post in the FTWeekend edition on Saturday at http://bit.ly/1nnDW1B.

Here's the critical consideration today: The key this morning is still the 'Goldilocks' psychology that should support the MARCH S&P 500 FUTURE on setbacks for now. And in spite of roundly negative fundamental influences Tuesday morning that included Chinese trade data, OECD Composite Leading Indicators and the NFIB Small Business Optimism Index, the US EQUITIES were not really off all that much. And they are obviously rebounding at present.

Out above the interim 1,958-62 area last week Tuesday morning it was important to note the next major resistance was 1,970-75. With MARCH S&P 500 FUTURE out above that in the wake of last Wednesday afternoon's Beige Book, it became the important near term support. Last Wednesday's early 1,967 low is now also the obvious Tolerance of that support.

What is most interesting this morning is that there was no further weakness down into that 1,970-75 area after the market neared it late Tuesday and the economic data remaining weak on balance. Perhaps the EQUITIES are anticipating some further aggressive accommodation indications from Mario Draghi at Thursday morning's ECB post-rate decision press conference.

With the S&P 500 up into 1,988 once again in pre-opening electronic trade, it seems more like it is bouncing around the interim 1,986 area and 1,995 that have become over-under areas as well. That is not surprising during a consolidation phase, yet does not make it any easier to specify definitive risk management levels and targets. While we wanted to share the key prominent levels once again, including the 2,010-20 higher resistance, patience is a virtue until the market actually tests the more prominent levels. That much is easy to understand in the current 'chop'.
