Dear Alert Service Subscriber,
This is a critical short-term view:

After the past couple of days circumspect VIEWS on the MARCH S&P 500 FUTURE we are back to more of an Alert!! status into the FOMC announcement, projections revisions at 13:00 and Chair Yellen's press conference at 13:30.

First of all, for anyone already trading the JUNE S&P 500 FUTURE, simply deduct $10 from the prices cited for the March contract. While the March contract expires on Thursday's Close, we stuck with it until now due to the lack of much chart and indicator history on the June contract. There is also the degree to which March is still the benchmark against the important front month trading levels we note today once again.

Here's the critical consideration today: That said, the MARCH S&P 500 FUTURE swing back up to the top of the 2,010-20 range from Thursday's test of 1,975-70 warranted the caution expressed in the past couple of days' VIEWS. While it was still looking good on the current 'Goldilocks' psychology into this week's central bank rate meetings, we noted all along it would need to be reassessed after the FOMC influence.

For now it is best to respect the current stall into the top of the 2,010-20 range, which was after all also the top of a two day $50 rally. If it should Close above that level, higher resistances are up in the 2,035, 2,050 and 2,060 areas, with the ultimate resistance not until 2,075-85.

However, 2,010-20 was also the area it failed from into the mid-September FOMC meeting. As we have reminded Rohr-Blog readers extensively of late, the ostensibly constructive lack of a rate hike then was overshadowed by the fact it was driven by the very weak outlook. And as we might see again today, that was compounded by the Fed Chair's insistence conditions were still ripe for a rate hike sooner than not from the same price levels as at present!

If it does come back under pressure, the lower interim supports remain in the 1,996 area and at 1,985. However, the far more critical support is 1,975-70 that it held last Thursday, with the next significant support into 1,932-25 below that.

The negative factors that we suspect can still weigh on equities were explored at length in the previous www.rohr-blog.com "Equities' Goldilocks Psychology" post, with review of those also in our letter that the Letters Editor at the Financial Times was kind enough to post in the FTWeekend edition a week ago Saturday at <http://bit.ly/1nnDW1B>.
