Subject: ROHR TREND ALERT!!

Dear Alert Service Subscriber,
This is a critical short-term view:

Even given the importance of the positive influence of the 'Yellen Put', ECB President Draghi defending the independence of the ECB at this morning's press conference in the face of renewed German criticism of low rates and extended QE does not seem to have fully reassured the equities at this point. For more on that important psychological issue see our mildly marked up version of this morning's Financial Times' article at <http://bit.ly/1XK9ATS>.

Here's the critical consideration today: June S&P 500 future finally respected the 3,035-32 support long enough to want to gap higher above 2,060 last Wednesday morning in spite of all those weak influences. It is most interesting that it remains above the more prominent 2,075-85 higher resistance, including a 2,078 UP Break above the major weekly down channel from the highs last summer.

And while we have specified it as a range, on the short term view the 2,085 and 2,075 levels are now separate technical supports in their own right. As we expected, the next resistance was up into 2,103-10, which remains the case with 2,120 above that.

It is also important in the very near term that the weakness this morning has flashed a bit of a negative signal on the short term trend. However, only back below the lower end of 2,085 and 2,075 does the June S&P 500 future look like it could have any sort of problem with the near-term up trend, with next lower support ostensibly into the 2,060-55 area.

However, in the broader view things are now much more critical for both bulls and bears. We have anticipated for a while that the current 2,078 UP Break might occur even within an overall bearish scenario. As much as it looks bullish, we have noted previous it is now more so a matter of whether such a high end UP Break is maintained rather than the initial UP Breakout. We shall see.
