Subject: ROHR TREND ALERT!!

Dear Alert Service Subscriber,
This is a critical short-term view:

Once again we note that the JUNE S&P 500 FUTURE failure later on last Thursday after the still dovish FOMC Wednesday and the BoJ 'no action' disappointment Thursday morning pointed to the sort of overall weakness we suspected would infect stalling US equities at some point. And the market failed on Monday's initial retest of the key resistance (i.e. the Negated major UP Break.) That is typically a fairly bearish sign.

Even given the importance of the positive influence of the 'Yellen Put', ECB President Draghi defending ECB independence at its press conference two weeks ago Thursday in the face of renewed German criticism of low rates and extended QE did not reassure the equities back then any more than the Fed last week. It appears the ability of accommodative central banks to encourage the economic outlook and equities is seriously fading.

This all works hand-in-glove with much weaker economic influences Tuesday morning, like a surprise 25 basis point rate cut from Reserve Bank of Australia. They have continued into this morning with the weaker than expected ADP Employment Change (among other indications) that will also dampen expectations for Friday's US Employment report.

Here's the critical consideration today: And the response to a still very accommodative FOMC was fairly subdued prior to the disappointment with the BoJ's lack of action Thursday morning. That saw the June S&P 500 future slip below 2,075-78 key support by late Thursday.

There already appeared to be a real problem with the near-term up trend of June S&P 500 future last week, as it failed to make any more extensive progress above the 2,078 major weekly chart channel UP Break from two weeks ago.

And the failure back below 2,085 and 2,075 Thursday into Friday was especially telling after so much ambivalent churn during what should have been a stronger phase. That is especially so with the lower of them also a Tolerance below that 2,078 major weekly chart channel UP Break. That represents a 'Negation' of that UP Break, leaving the higher zone as formidable resistance... confirmed by Tuesday's weakness after Monday's squeeze right up into that area.

Now also below next lower critical support into the 2,060-55 area gap higher from two weeks ago means it appears to be headed into an even more major selloff once again. Next lower supports are 2,035-32 and the more major 2,020-10 range. However, the failure to firm up into the 2,100 area once again very possibly also presages the next major selloff into the 1,900 or even the mid-low 1,800 areas... or even lower ground.
