Dear Alert Service Subscriber,
This is a critical short-term view:

Once again, Friday was a very interesting day for the JUNE S&P 500 FUTURE. That it was able to sell off in spite of all of that strong US economic data reinforces concerns about the overall global economic performance into the balance of 2016. And we are seeing much the same this morning.

Rather than simply looking at how the data is progressing, at times it is important to ask what the markets are telling us in their own right. US equities that finish the week under pressure in spite of strong data are a classical sign of a bear market shaking off near-term positive indications to reflect the overall trend.

While it might also be a sign that the Fed 'rate hike factor' is back in a 'good news is bad news' reflex, that doesn't explain why the GOVVIES are holding up so well on an overall rally. In the context of Friday's and this morning's US economic data the JUNE T-NOTE FUTURE should be getting slammed, not just backing off modestly from key 131-00 area resistance. The other international GOVVIES are also holding up very well near the tops of their rallies.

Here's the critical consideration today: The June S&P 500 future weakness below 2,075-78 key support by three weeks ago Thursday into Friday was especially telling. That was the 'Negation' of the 2,078 major weekly chart channel UP Break.

Recently once again below next lower critical support into the mid-April 2,060-55 area gap higher meant it was likely headed into another further selloff. Yet it decided to rally instead on Monday. Next lower support at 2,035-32 has not quite reached prior to pushing above 2,060-55 with the more major resistance back up at that 2,075-78 Negated UP Break resistance. Now in spite of further serial strong US economic data this morning it is back down into the low end of 2,060-55, which remains the critical short-term interim technical threshold.
