Dear Alert Service Subscriber,
This is a critical short-term view:

The big decision is now whether the equities will convincingly recover back above the major technical thresholds that were violated by Monday's Close, or sink back into a weaker trend state after this morning's significant higher openings. As the US equities have been the strong sister since last summer, their fate is very important to the overall international equities psychology.

Here's the critical consideration today: The key lead contract levels for the S&P 500 future remained both the 2,075-78 and 2,085 areas with 2,100 area above that. While all of those were exceeded on Thursday, the surprise UK LEAVE campaign success resulting in its decision to exit the EU knocked all global equities heavily overnight into Friday morning.

With the September S&P 500 future gapping well below 2,060-55 Friday morning and failing there on its intraday rally, further weakness took it below the 2,035-32 that held with temporary slippage Friday morning. Closing the week down into the top of the more major 2,020-10 range support left the question of whether its 2,000 area Tolerance would be violated early this week.

That appeared to be the case on Monday's Close below December's 1,991.50 low. Gapping back above it this morning is impressive. Yet only a full recovery back above the more major 2,010-20 range will restore real strength. All of the violated supports noted above remain the higher resistances.

Anything short of that leaves the potential return to weakness a real possibility. And on past form that means only interim support in the 1,955-43 range, with the more major lower support not until 1,900. Of course, selloffs last August and September and in January-February of this year tested the mid-low 1,800 area.
