Dear Alert Service Subscriber,
This is a critical short-term view:

As noted previous, Tuesday was very interesting. The culmination of negative influences from weak US auto sales and the Crude Oil drop reasserted a “bad news is bad news” psychology. And this was not offset by the Japanese stimulus package announcement.

Yet the key to the technical failure of the US equities (more below) is now actually with the reaction to this morning’s Bank of England rate cut decision and reinvigoration of its long dormant QE program. However, even that only has the US equities back up to the resistance at failed support from Tuesday. It is going to be very interesting to see how the market finishes out the week after Friday’s US Employment report now that further central bank and government actions have failed to restore the near term equities strength.

This is the critical consideration:

Tuesday’s September S&P 500 future drop below the 2,151.25 low of the last couple of week’s narrow trading range would not seem very troubling in and of itself. Yet coming in the wake of Monday’s opening gap higher to a 2,177.75 new all-time trading high (above the July 25th 2,172.50) left a more negative tone than might have been possible from any weakness which would have occurred prior to that Monday new high.

The question now is whether this means there was an UP Break failure (i.e. above 2,172.50) that has exhibited a definitive topping indication that might carry over into the broader trend? Or is this just the next bear trap like so many others that have occurred across the long up trend in this very resilient bull market?

Suffice to say for now that the September S&P 500 future 2,151.25 low was the Tolerance of the 2,160-55 congestion range. As it was neared in the wake of the more hawkish FOMC Statement last Wednesday, its violation is also a central bank (and other influences) psychology level. Yet as 2,151.25 was the Tolerance level, the real key for the balance of this week and beyond is whether it can sustain recovery back above the 2,160-55 range to re-establish it as support... especially after Friday’s US Employment report.

Even if not, lower supports remain at violated resistances at the interim 2,132 May 2015 all-time high, and more prominent Friday June 24th (pre-Brexit) 2,120 high and historic congestion along with the heftier 2,105 congestion.
