Dear Alert Service Subscriber,
This is a critical short-term view:

US equities remain choppy, failing again on all recent tests of higher resistance as expected. However they have also been unable to provide selloffs into more significant short-term support until last Thursday morning's temporary pressure, which was followed by an immediate rebound. As we had expected, the selloff was in response to last Thursday's first full day of Fed-speak in a while.

Now we have the further uncertainty that still suggests a cautious approach, like on UK Prime Minister May's speech indicating there will be a definitive British exit (Brexit) from the European Union. We would still like to wait for more weakness, and this afternoon brings the next round of Fed influence with the 13:00 CST release of the Beige Book. We remain confident the US equities will continue to hold dips, with the Fed influence far less prominent as well on the shift to the political and economic focus due to the incoming Trump administration's plans. Look for erratic trading as well on Republican disagreements over those.

This is (still) the critical consideration:

Due to sustained aggressive increases in weekly MA-41 (as it loses old low end Closes from the sharp early 2016 selloff) March S&P 500 future extended weekly Oscillator levels now move up roughly $5 each week. That nearest support threshold is up into the 2,253-48 range this week. Yet after having having increased into the 2,236-31 range we had previewed as the support for the last week of 2016, the gap up from that area leaves it as support as well.

And in line with our reticence to chase the rally to re-establish bullish positions, the initial higher weekly Oscillator area this week is up to the 2,274-79 area the market has already tested multiple times over the past couple of weeks. That is reinforced by hefty mid-December through early-January topping congestion, with the March contract trading high and front month all-time continuation high (from the December contract) both into the 2,278.25 level. Those also play loosely into whether DJIA actually manages to surpass 20,000, which it has very narrowly missed doing so far.

This set up the potential for the short-term downside correction that has still left the overall uptrend intact. And those higher levels will need to be violated to signal any meaningful overrunning of the key weekly Oscillator resistance. The further extended major Oscillator resistance not until the low 2,300 area. The top end of the lower 2,248-43 range Oscillator support was barely tested Thursday prior to an immediate rebound, reinforcing the resilience noted above and moving up into the 2,253-48 range this week, even if the ultimate Tolerance is as low as last year's 2,236.25 Close.
