Subject: ROHR NOTICE: One Day Holiday Today

Dear Alert Service Subscriber,

With China, Europe and the UK out today for their various May 1st holidays, we have also decided to take the day off. While the main US equities appear resilient (and tech is actually quite strong), there will likely be less than dramatic activity today in the wake of globally weakish fundamental influences spilling over from last week's softer economic data.

And the overall macro-technical background remains much the same as previous on all markets (for better or worse) still being somewhat hostage to the fortunes of the Trump administration agenda. And on the technical trend side, in case the US equities decide to begin pushing up again the next June S&P 500 future extended weekly Oscillator levels move up to the 2,405-10 range; just above the old March 1st front month futures all-time 2,401 high.

Any further details can be reviewed in last Friday's ALERT!!

Best regards,

The Rohr Alert!! Team
