Subject: ROHR TREND ALERT!!

Dear Alert Service Subscriber,

While we are getting somewhat of a reaction from the failed attempt to overrun the weekly Oscillator resistance highlighted on Monday, the US equities very constructive response to Thursday's news and the Friday rally extension in spite of a far less than friendly US Employment report remains an indication of how bullish they remain overall. And with the market standing still, the Evolutionary Trend View remains much the same as Tuesday's ALERT!!

We refer you back to that so we can devote a bit more space to upcoming critical events and reports. Thursday was always going to be the major influence horizon this week due to major events along with a wealth of economic data. Those events include the European Central Bank rate decision and press conference, critical UK Parliamentary elections, and Ex-FBI Director Comey testifying before the US Senate Intelligence Committee.

However, even prior to that, one bit of key global analysis was released this morning: the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development's Semi-annual Global Economic Outlook. That can be accessed at <http://www.oecd.org/eco/economicoutlook.htm>. And the reason it is so important is that it is still showing only very modest global growth gains, even in the US where high expectations had driven stronger equities pricing among other market trends we have reviewed of late.

And of course, this remains an important perspective that relates to the US President returning to his wild tweeting ways, on which we (among many others) have expressed concern. If he continues to distract from (and in some cases act against) the administration legislative agenda, the chances any of the proposed reforms (healthcare and tax as well as infrastructure spending) will be enacted is diminished. And that could still be a significant headwind for the US equities and dollar as well as a supportive factor for the govies, as we have seen of late.
